Ground Guide

The majority of the facilities are on the west side of the ground with an all-seater stand level with the half-way line on this side. This stand consists of half a dozen rows of metal benches with chair cushions at the back of the stand to be put over the metal surfaces for anyone wanting to sit on these. Close to this is a covered standing area which is adjoined to a pretty decent clubhouse. This section is populated with chairs and benches in both the covered area and out in the open.

The remainder of the ground is uncovered standing although there is not a great deal of room round the other three sides of the stadium. There is a concrete walkway behind the goal at the northern end along with some high fencing to catch wayward balls. On the east side of the pitch is the team dugouts.

The stadium has two seated stands on either side of the long edges of the pitch, although these do not stretch the length of the pitch. One on side, the stand is built into the clubhouse, the overhang of which provides cover against the elements.

In addition to these stands, there are designated covered standing areas behind each goal, and a metal barrier which stretches around the circumference of the playing surface. In total, the capacity of Parkside is around 3,500, with seating for 500 people.
